

WOMEN, GENDER, AND SEXUALITY STUDIES MAJOR

Department Chair: Neda Atanasoski, Ph.D.

Rooted in the liberatory traditions of Women's Studies, the Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies B.A. challenges structural inequities based on intersecting hierarchies of colonialism, gender, caste, race, sexuality, ethnicity, nationality, and ability. The WGSS major offers students opportunities to develop community-centered knowledge and practices for collective liberation, with the aim of transforming systems of oppression and imagining freer futures. Students will take courses informed by intersectional and anti-colonial scholarship and methodologies from the arts and humanities, social sciences, and many other fields. Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies offers students a flexible program of study in which there is focused attention on building students' analysis of varied modes of structural and interlinked oppressions and devising visions for critiquing, resisting, and dismantling such modes of systemic violence.

Our introductory courses equip students with the tools and vocabulary to both analyze and respond effectively to social problems. Upper-division courses, typically structured as small seminars, focus on cultivating students' research and writing skills, critical analysis, and synthesis of different disciplines and ways of knowing rooted in topics of deep personal and community relevance. Advanced students will take our advanced research capstone where they will create and carry out a research project that ties together the work done throughout the major, developing methods that students will carry into a variety of careers and into communities beyond the University. The courses and experiences students undertake throughout the major are designed to support students in shaping futures in areas such as community organizing, social justice advocacy, transformative media, care work, medicine and public health, law, public policy, academia and more. The program engages students' critical thinking and develops their analysis of society's power structures while centering the importance of relational accountability to the communities we research alongside and serve. We seek to shape a new generation of scholars and leaders who, with us, will work to acknowledge, understand, and critically interrogate hierarchies of difference, while imagining more just futures.

Courses offered by this department may be found under the following acronyms: WGSS, LGBT. They were previously also offered under WMST.

Program Learning Outcomes

Students are expected to fully engage with the curriculum and the opportunities presented for learning and research. Having completed the program, students should have acquired the following knowledge, skills, and practices:

1. Students will be able to critically analyze issues of power related to women, race/ethnicity, gender, sexuality, and class.
2. Students will understand and be able to critique key developments in gender, critical race, and queer thought as strategies for social change.
3. Students will demonstrate familiarity with major concepts and vocabulary of gender, critical race, and queer thought in the field of Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies.

REQUIREMENTS

Students will earn a total of 33 credit hours, distributed as indicated below. Drawing from more than 50 courses, including many cross-listed with other academic units, students will have the opportunity to explore broadly within the field and to create their own path through the major relevant to their special interests. At least 24 credits must be at or above the 3xx level. No course with a grade less than "C-" may be used to satisfy the major. An overall GPA of 2.0 in the major is required for graduation. Students will design their programs in consultation with a Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies advisor.
